Our aim was to compare the diagnostic accuracy of the first visit and the repeated visit in the diagnosis of systemic arterial hypertension (SAH) in routine practice. This study was carried out at the General Medicine Clinic, Lugo Hospital (Spain), in two sequential cohorts: in the first cohort, all consecutive hypertensive patients were studied at first attendance and the diagnosis was registered; in the second cohort, these patients were reviewed a second time. The first visit and the second visit were performed on different days, and the patients were recruited consecutively. The diagnosis of SAH at first visit and second visit was classified as true-positive (TP).
