Simply connect your hard drive with ExtFS/Btrfs/XFS partitions to your computer and instantly work with any media in Linux partitions. Opportunities: These computers run on the Linux operating system, which is a very flexible system that supports many different applications and services, including web hosting services and file systems. You can create virtual machines for various purposes, for example, to organize several servers if you are programming on Linux in C language. All computers go through a certification process, which guarantees compatibility and stable operation of programs written under Windows, home version: If you are having trouble creating virtual machines on Windows, this guide is for you. It is written to help you create and configure VMware Server, VMX, and other virtual servers. These guest operating systems can be added to Linux. The settings used in this guide and posted on MyVMware.com will allow you to install a virtual machine and change Windows VM environment settings using virtual desktops. Setting up a VM virtual machine: boot on the VMWare host from a network drive, to do this, restart the computer, select the item (Run As... or press the + keys). A window will appear (Figure 1.27) with instructions on how to run the VM installation. Rice. 1.27. Running the VM installation In the window for selecting the file to be loaded, select the partition for installing Virtual Machine and (optionally) the partition with drives indicated in its name. If everything is done correctly, you will be prompted to download the archive with the settings for these servers and the source code section. Select the section with source codes and click "Upload file". On the same page, if any configuration is set, click the "Edit" button and adjust the settings. VMPeer requires you to submit a request to add another VM client to the network. This feature can be used to add a computer to a group or to an OS partition, a disk partition, or a selected virtual disk. Please try to set the disk size and number of partitions in advance in order to save time. Also for VMImage, you need to reconnect to the network, which requires you to enter a login and password. 423 protocols should also be used. V
