Someone is making a "Trailmaker" knife and very probably using American Rosewood and can probably be sourced out of the U.S. This knife has a rough bakelite handle. It has a 4-inch blade. It has a single-piece steel lock-blade that is made from M4-Profile Damascus Steel. It has a worn blue steel finish. Word mark: TRAILMAKER. Status/Status Date: UN-REVIVABLE. 11/25/2008. Serial Number: 75459568. "Trailmaker" is a registered trademark of The Hong Kong Council For The Promotion Of The UK Greater China Region. The Hong Kong Council for the promotion of the UK Greater China Region is a non-profit making company set up by the Government to promote and maintain good relations between the UK and China, Hong Kong, Macau and South East Asia.Q: How does stackless python work exactly? After reading this question, I am somewhat confused. If my memory serves right, all python scripts run using a loop and are structured in "functions". Consider this: `import sys def f1(): f1() sys.exit(0) f1()` In an optimized/pipelined/stacked compiled language, after compiling the above python code to assembly, it could be one long line, and the word "f1" would be replaced by a sequence of instructions to call the function. However, in stackless python the same code is not compiled at all - this question has an answer explaining it but is alluding to GIL problems, what about functions that require GIL and
