Unveiling its awesomeness at the Chicago Auto Show, Taurus has just announced the Rooftop Performance Package for the SHO. The variant, likely to be officially announced sometime this March or April, will have some fitting of the 'risks' section in life's passport with the adoption of Taurus' Super Throttle 4WD technology, which is a 4x4 system, that will have you bragging about your high-speed adventures (or at least telling people about it - nobody likes a cocky loudmouth). The RPP, as it's been named, will be revealed when the vehicle first debuts in Chicago, in March 2016. One of the key things that sets it apart from the standard SHO is its taller rear wheel arches. Front and rear wheel lips will also be matched with larger exterior mirrors, a new roof liner and even a larger stowage space in the rear. Other goodies such as embroidered logo seats and a unique livery, are also included with the package. As with most performance packages, a notable 0.8-second boost in the 0-100km/h sprint is also included with the RPP. There's no word on pricing for the package, but once the world is introduced to it in the SHO, consumers will be able to take home a sense of bragging rights, without a whole lot of dough.

The observed rate constant for this process is nearly equal to the rate constant for the rate-determining step of the overall reaction. The rate-determining step for many enzymatic reactions has long eluded experimental determination and been regarded as one of the most important problems in enzyme catalysis. Recently, several methods have been developed to distinguish whether the rate-determining step is the passage of the reaction coordinate
