Staring at a few objects in a room they did not know anything about, we realized we do not know that the technology we have is obsolete or not.Elizabeth Warren. Katherine Watson/Getty Images Elizabeth Warren officially launched her 2020 presidential bid on Saturday, releasing an announcement video and a sweeping statement detailing a $2 trillion plan to combat climate change. "They told us solar power couldn't scale. They told us wind was nothing more than a rounding error. They told us coal was forever. We didn't listen," Warren said in her video. "And when we did try to fight back, our best and brightest warned us not to fight them — we must learn from their mistakes. They told us climate change was nothing more than a hoax. They told us any action would bring us economic ruin and tragedy. Guess what? We're still here." The comments were a jab at the energy industry, which has been criticized by environmental groups and some Democrats who say it has spent millions of dollars to work against climate measures. In her first major policy proposal, Warren outlined eight policy prescriptions that would be included in her first 100 days as president. She would cancel student loan debt, ensure the voting and political-records of every single person are accessible online, introduce a carbon tax, and pass a Medicare-for-all program, among other things. She said the plan to combat climate change will be laid out in a separate plan "as soon as [she] can get it right." "The climate crisis is an attack on our Constitution and our democracy," Warren said in her video. "You can't respond to an attack like that by putting your head in the sand. We need to be prepared to fight for our right to a healthy, safe, and affordable future." Other climate change proposals that Warren has made in the past include a plan to transition the US to 100% clean energy by 2045 and a $
