In D7 I would have used this: `$field['field_content_css'] = array('#theme' => 'field_content_css', '#field_content_css_settings' => array('url' => ''),);` How to achieve the same in D8? I tried this: `$field['field_content_css'] = array('#theme' => 'field_content_css', '#field_content_css_settings' => array('url' => ''),);` But I get this: Undefined index: field_content_css_settings A: You can either create an EntityFieldBroker_FieldConfig_EntityContent_Css::instance() method or you can use the configuration system. You would then set the field_content_css_settings key directly to the instance of an array: // Field content CSS settings `$field['field_content_css_settings'] = ['url' => '',];` are intimate with that organization, but we have no control over how they are disciplined. We want the kids and the volleyball team to be good. This is a school-wide decision where we wanted to take a stance to protect the kids. And I'm not talking about the kids or volleyball players who have been disciplined, I'm talking about the rest of the team. If you speak to the head volleyball coach, she'll say she was blindsided and that she doesn't understand why we made the choice. What was the message sent to the student athletes when the announcement came down? I think the message is, you get what we're going to tolerate. I believe it was clear that that was not the appropriate action and I think there will be people who disagree with that decision. The volleyball coach told me the day before
